IPS Enhanced Index 30 Quarterly Report

As of 30/06/2017

Second quarter 2017

Market update

Political uncertainty was a major theme across global markets this quarter, with both good and bad outcomes. Emmanuel Macron's victory in the French elections and Angela Merkel's Christian Democratic Party's strong performance in local elections have helped ease concerns over a seemingly populist anti-globalisation movement in Europe.

British equities and the Sterling initially responded well to Theresa May's call for a snap election in May to strengthen the nation's position in Brexit negotiations. However, this momentum dissipated when the election produced a hung parliament and May's Brexit plan still lacked detail at quarter end.

North Korea's nuclear missile program is also stirring the pot but it is not expected to affect equity markets as long as the US and China continue to cooperate on the matter.

China is increasingly conscious of its financial fragility caused by high levels of corporate debt, the complex nature of its wealth management products, and links to the shadow banking system. To overcome this, the central bank and three regulators (banking, securities and insurance) have joined forces to address the complex and opaque shadow banking sector, and introduced aggressive restrictions on permissible financial activities. This is the right move in the long run to defuse overleveraging and systemic financial risk in China's economy, although we are watching closely for short term negative repercussions.

Model update

Although financial markets were a little weak in the month of June, performance has been strong for the past 12 months.

The Vanguard Emerging Markets Shares and Vanguard International Shares funds were the standout performers within your portfolio earning 5.6% and 3.7% respectively over the quarter.

Within Australian shares, the Vanguard Australian Shares Index fund earned 13.7% for your portfolio over the year, although due to changing economic conditions and a weaker iron ore price, it experienced a small loss over the recent quarter. As we do not expect these conditions to improve, your portfolio remains underweight in Australian shares.
